The present invention relates to a rubber composition used for obtaining molded rubber products with superior properties such as mechanical property, appearance, and surface property. As a rubber composition that is used for producing various molded rubber products such as tires and hoses by vulcanization molding, a rubber composition using a blend of a rubber component including a copolymer of ethylene and a C3-20 xcex1-olefin as a main chain component of a diene elastomer and a resin component including an ion exchange resin and ethylene/vinyl alcohol copolymer resin has been used. The vulcanized molded rubber products produced using such a rubber composition, however, have been required to have a rubber component, so that rubber moldings are poor in crack resistance after vulcanization. Accordingly, the vulcanized molded rubber products have been provided in an almost shrunk and solidified state, and in many cases, the vulcanized molded rubber products obtained by vulcanization molding have had very high rigidity. For example, the tire tread rubber composition of JP-A-5-228,786 (hereinafter, the term, xe2x80x9cJP-Axe2x80x9d refers to published unexamined Japanese Patent Application) has been composed of a rubber component including a blend of a copolymer of ethylene and a C3-20 xcex1-olefin and a resin component including a terpolymer of ethylene/xcex1-olefin/maleic anhydride, and is vulcanized in a state of being almost shrunk and solidified, thereby providing a molded rubber product having a very high hardness. As a technique of improving the crack resistance of a vulcanized molded rubber product, a vulcanized molded rubber product having a process of preparing a vulcanization molding and molding the vulcanization molding in a state of allowing a diene elastomer to be hardly shrunk and thereby allowing the vulcanization to be started in a proper state is proposed in JP-A-9-74102. In such a molding method, however, there is a problem that a molding step is increased and the molding step time
